Key to Hazardous History

Source: Pearson/Longman's Cutting Edge - Embassy English Course book - level 2B pages 90/91

Three centuries ago, people had much shorter lives. In 1700, insurance companies put the average life expectancy of a new-born baby at only fourteen years! The average life expectancy in the world today is sixty-six years, and in some countries it is much higher: in Japan or France, for example, the average is more than eighty. This is mainly because of better diet, better hygiene and better healthcare. Even in the olden days though, it is interesting that if people survived to be an adult they often lived to be sixty or seventy.

Having children was much more dangerous in those days: one in every nine women died in childbirth. Even so, women used to have many more children than they do today: in 1800 the average American family had seven children - today the average is less than two. Perhaps the reason for this was that so many babies died: even a hundred years ago, 20% of children died before they were five.

One reason that there were so many diseases was that people knew much less about hygiene: even rich people didn't use to wash much - many people thought that it was dangerous to take a bath, so they often bathed only once or twice a year. Instead they used perfume to cover body odours. Poor people didn't even have toilets or clean water and most had lice in their hair, bodies, clothes and beds.

There was no toothpaste in those days either and only rich people used toothbrushes. Of course, toothache was very common, but there were no professional dentists until the middle of the nineteenth century. Before that, if you had a toothache, you had to go to the barber's. He not only cut hair, but also used to take out teeth and perform other small operations.
