Directions: Read the passage. Then answer the questions below.

Life on Mars?

For centuries, mankind has been fascinated by Mars. The closest planet to Earth is observable by the naked eye every fifteen years. This means that early man could see the so-called “Red Planet.” In fact, the first recorded notice of Mars was made by Ancient Egyptian astronomers. But it was not until the last 150 years or so that humans began to really think about the planet. That is when new telescopes made the surface of Mars visible. It is also when people began to assume that there was life on Mars.

Predictions about the Surface

In 1877, an Italian astronomer named Giovanni Schiaparelli set out to make a map of Mars. He saw something in his telescope that made him believe Mars to have what he called “canali.” Schiaparelli gave these canali the names of famous rivers on Earth. As a result, people mistranslated canali as canals, or rivers. In fact, he meant that Mars appeared to have channels or grooves on its surface. Making matters worse, those channels actually don’t exist! They were an illusion. Modern, closer looks at the surface of Mars have revealed that there are no canals or channels.

Despite not being there, the supposed canals led people to believe Mars had water. With water, there could be life. These astronomers predicted that Mars likely had life much like Earth. And science-fiction writers used that belief to make stories about Martian life. Books such as John Carter of Mars and The Martian Chronicles would become popular works over the next 75 years. And Hollywood movies would use these stories and others to make more Martian stories. Throughout the 20th century, millions still believed or at least imagined that there was life on Mars.

The Truth

Only in the past fifty years, as NASA has sent actual spacecraft to Mars, have these reports been broken. The Mariner Missions and later the Viking spacecraft sent back close-up images of Mars. They showed a dry planet lacking any sign of water, life, or the ability to form life. So the idea of Martian life remains more fiction than science.

- 1) As used in paragraph 1, the word observable means able to be
 - A. seen
 - B. reported
 - C. explained
 - D. felt
- 2) According to information in the second paragraph, why did astronomers think there were canals on Mars?
 - A. because spacecraft detected water on the surface
 - B. because Giovanni Schiaparelli said there were canals there
 - C. because Egyptian astronomers first predicted they were there
 - D. because of a poor translation of an Italian word

- A. grooves
B. telescopes
C. water
D. air

- A. prove that astronomers have often been wrong about Mars
B. discuss changing ideas about life on Mars in history
C. argue that life is not possible on any planet other than Earth
D. suggest that astronomers may one day find life on the surface of Mars
